Research Interests

My research develops mathematical foundations for machine learning and sequential decision-making by combining applied probability with algorithm design. My current work centers on two directions:

1. Distributional analysis of stochastic algorithms. I establish distributional convergence and characterize the long-run distributions and bias of stochastic algorithms, providing a foundation for the design of more efficient algorithms.
2. Satisficing sequential decision-making under imperfect information. I develop algorithms that maintain satisfactory performance while avoiding unnecessary learning costs under imperfect information, including when the available historical data are biased or the environment is nonstationary.
